THE WILL TO SAFETY.

In a thoughtful address delivered before the recent Safety Convention in Toronto, Dr. H. J. Cody used a phrase that will linger in the minds of those who heard him. That phrase was "the will to safety." We have all heard of the will to power and Dr. Cody's desire was to persuade both management and men to think safety and achieve it.

The reports received so far in 1924 by the Workmen's Compensation Board indicate that 18,710 accidents have been reported during the first four months of the year and that the total compensation awarded by the Board in the same period has been $2,071,058.60. This is a very large sum and, with the constant desire of everyone in the country to reduce costs, appears to offer a legitimate point of attack in the effort to reduce unnecessary expenses. The safety movement is largely educational in its methods and if, by intensive work in our industries, the will to safety can be developed, there will be fewer accidents.

"PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK"

FINE PLAY GIVEN IN TRINITY CHURCH HALL, LAST WEEK.

A splendid presentation of Jerome K Jerome's drama in three acts, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" was given by the Trinity Young People's Union, Tuesday and Wednesday nights of last week, in the Sunday school hall. The large hall was filled to capacity and the young people are worthy of all praise for their fine interpretation of a most interesting play. They well earned the enthusiastic applause which was accorded to them. The stage was most attractively arranged and lighted. Each character was well sustained and the costumes were very pleasing.

Limbert Graham took the part of "The Stranger" with great effect and one would say that either the part was made for him of for the part. Miss Hawley was fine as "Mrs. Sharpe," the landlady. Miss Evelyn McKinn as "Stasia," the Slavey, did her part to perfection. Her clear voice and good enunciation could be heard well in any part of the hall. She was particularly bright and charming.

The music rendered between the acts was much appreciated.

AN INTERESTING LETTER

Les Arches, Le Hoeq,
Jersey, April 29th.

Dear Mr. Pollard:—

In fulfilment of my promise to write you a letter for the Express, I am going to try to describe briefly this beautiful and interesting island of Jersey, where I am spending two weeks of the Easter holidays.

Jersey is the most important of the channel Islands, by its size and population. It is 50 square miles in area, and has 50,000 inhabitants. It is just three hours by boat from St. Malo. The coast of Normandy is plainly visible towards the west; on bright days we can see the towers of some of the Normandy cathedrals. At the south and west is Brittany, to which Jersey seems joined by a line of reefs whose grey rocks rise above the water as far as the eye can see. Towards the north are Guernsey and the other Channel Islands.

Jersey has had an interesting history. Sole remnant of the power which the Kings of England held in bygone times over Normandy, Jersey was for many years a bone of contention between the English and the French, and the scene of many conflicts. The French kings wanted to join Jersey to the fief of Normandy, and thus complete the conquests of Philippe over King John. But the inhabitants of Jersey, uniting their efforts to those of the Kings of England, determined to retain possession of this last remnant of their fine Norman possessions, resisted the French with such courage and determination that all the French invasions were repulsed.

At the time of the struggle between Chas. I. and the Parliament, the Jersey people espoused the cause of the king. They showed their sympathy in many practical ways, such as equipping a fleet of ten vessels for his service, and welcoming him on their island after he was driven from England. When the unfortunate Chas. had paid with his head for the faults he had committed, the Jersey people immediately proclaimed Chas. II for their king. This prince took refuge in the only domain of all his kingdom which remained faithful to him. The enthusiasm and devotion of the Jersey people for the king was so great that they commenced to attract the attention of the Parliament. A fleet was sent under the command of Admiral Blake. Charles fled to Paris. His followers were besieged in Elizabeth Castle and after a brave resistance, forced to surrender.

The traveller who comes to Jersey from France, enjoys a sight he can be forgotten. Hardly has one passed the Minquiers —those treacherous reefs, where many a ship went down, and many another vessel since—than the island of Jersey begins to come in view. Soon the old fortress of Mont Orgueil becomes distinct. Mont Orgueil is generally supposed to have been built by Robert, son of William the Conqueror. It is situated on a rocky peninsula, protected on the side of the sea by inaccessible rocks, and on the land by massive ramparts.

At the foot of the severe ruins of Mont Orgueil is the little town of Gorey. Gorey Harbor shelters the flotilla of boats which are employed in the oyster fishing between the coast of France and Jersey. The fishing commences the first of September and finishes the last of May. During this period the harbor is the scene of much activity. More than two hundred and fifty boats a day come in with their catch.

After Mont Orgueil, the boat passes the Fort, then picturesque Elizabeth Castle, then the beautiful St. Aubin's Bay, with St. Aubin's village, then finally glides into the harbor of St. Helier. St. Helier is a thriving town of 30,000 people. The traveller who has just come from dirty, sombre St. Malo is struck by the cleanliness and brightness of the town. St. Malo is quaint and picturesque, St. Helier is almost equally so, with the added advantage of being clean. The very people take great pride in their homes. The houses are pretty and well kept up, and the lawns ablaze with flowers—daffodils, narcissus, tulips, hyacints, wall-flowers primroses, stocks, etc, etc. Geraniums grow here in big bushes. I have seen many of them people ten to fifteen feet high, with flowers as big as my hat.

All the gardens are walled. There is nothing like a wall garden for fruit, because the stone wall holds the heat, and the fruit trees are trained to grow along the walls. The fruit trees which are not trained along the walls are planted in rows and trimmed so that the branches do not spread in all directions, but extend in a straight line only. A row of trees takes up no more room than a vine.

I was surprised to find figtrees, palms and bamboos growing here. Cabbages grow here ten feet high. The farmers keep cutting the leaves off for the cows, and the stalks keep growing in height. They use the cabbage stalks for walking sticks.

The house where I am staying is on the shore of the sea, at the south end of the island. The beach is flat, and the tide goes out for four miles. The northern coast of the island is much more rugged. Steep hills and cliffs rise abruptly out of the water. Parts of the hills are covered with yellow gorse, in other parts the granite pierces the thin layer of vegetation. Along the basse of the cliffs are enormuos rocks and deep mysterious caves with narrow dark passages leading from one into another.

We have had beautiful weather until the last day or so, when it turned windy and yesterday Mrs. Lamey said it would be a good time to go and see La Corbiere light-house, as the waves would be so high that it would be a wonderful sight. We had the top of the car up and the sides on. As we were driving along the Esplanade—a wide, beautiful road along the coast—the wind tore off one of the side curtains, blew away Vernon's cap and the white scarf Mrs. Lamey had to keep her hat on. We put on the cap, but the scarf went up and up, into the air until we could not see it any more.

The sea at La Carbiere—the roughest part of the coast—was a wonderful sight. After leaving La Carbiere we went for a 25-mile drive inland. The wind died down a lot, and anyway it is not felt so much away from the coast. It is the most beautiful country, just like a page out of a picture book, winding lanes, bordered with stone walls or trimly cut hedges, beautiful homes—Many rich English people come here to live as there is no income tax—and such beautiful trees, ivy everywhere. It is beautiful and so unlike any country I have seen, that it gives me a feeling of unreality. If we had come so a gingerbread house or met the wolf and Red Riding Hood, I wouldn't have been more than mildly surprised.

We often take our tea with us. I have had my tea on a cliff overhanging the sea in an old ruined castle and several times on a sandy shore.

The day of the opening of the Wembley Exhibition we went to a neighbor's and heard the King's speech, the Princes, and the Bishop of London's prayer, the anthems, etc. It was awful. I heard every word of what the King and Prince said and nearly every word of what the Bishop said. The anthems were beautiful. It was very thrilling. Afterwards Mr. Robeson (the neighbor) took us through the flowers and conservatory and gave us huge boquets of bronze and yellow roses, tresias, forget-me-nots, sweet peas, and—but that is has forty different kinds of geraniums.

We went to church yesterday morning, also Easter Sunday morning. It is the loveliest old church, the second oldest on the island, built in 1167. All the churches in Jersey are built in lanes which lead to the sea, because in bygone times the churches here were places of refuge and hunted persons fleeing to Jersey could easily find the churches.

Easter Sunday this old old church was beautifully decorated with primroses, moss Easter lilies and narcissus. There was such a profusion and so artistically arranged.

I have had the most wonderful holiday imaginable. We go for long drives every day to different places of interest. Nothing could be more delightful. Everywhere the scenery is beauty, but so varied that there is no monotony. I will always think of color when I think of Jersey. The vivid blue sky, the changing colors of the sea, the yellow sands and reddish brown rocks, the red roofs of the houses, the white blossoms of the fruit trees and the green branches of the trees which meet over our heads in the lanes, make up a picture which will delight to the eye and to the soul.

Travelling about is lovely of course, but it isn't all enjoyment. There are many lovely people and then one leaves them, forever, probably.

MURIEL PAUL.

DEMOCRACY AND GRAFT

DR. J. G. SHEARER.

All the world is sniffing at the stench of oil from Washington. The smell of secret commissions in Ontario is pungent enough to affect nostrils beyond the boundaries of that Province. Strong malodors from Newfoundland reach far beyond the ancient colony's island shores.

That reveals one of the weaknesses of democracy. The many are indifferent to the public interest. Many others are overtrustful. It is easy for selfseekers to fill their coffers with money belonging to the people. The money they get may be turned into their own pockets or into the treasury of their political party to help them maintain their hold on power. It may be paid in secret commissions by financial concerns or in generous subscriptions to party funds to enable friends to secure or retain possession of the treasury benches. Such immense profits are to be made from bond sales or from monopolistic influence, or from tacit permission to violate liquor laws or the Narcotic Drugs Act, that those securing these special privileges or advantages can well afford to offer bribes so immense that small men or easy men are sorely tempted. A well-known Hebrew bootlegger rose in Bradstreets from $75,000 to $2,000,000 in two years. It is no wonder some yield and make moral lapses, but live in comfort ever after. To some policemen or customs checkers $1,000 looks large. Some have risked their positions for such a bait. And to some much higher in the public service $50,000 or $100,000 or $500,000 looks wonderfully tempting.

And there is no question that immense sums of money are being spent by lawless plunderers to purchase immunity from the penalties due their violations of law.

Yet we have reason to rejoice that so often public servants indignantly refuse these golden baits. The writer is too experienced in public service to be impressed with the usual floating rumors, but he has unquestioned knowledge of cases in which public servants very recently have been offered sums varying all the way from $10,000 up to $500,000 which have been indignantly spurned. The would-be bribers are always too cunning in their manner of offering etc to expose themselves to arrest and conviction. But they do it none the less.

All honor to the men who refuse! It ought to be told of them to their credit. I, however, am not authorized to publish names.

What is the remedy? That is not so easy. For one thing capable and clean men ought not to leave highly responsible positions to incapable and unclean, schemers and grafters. Patriotism and Christian ethics call upon them to make the sacrifice of office often entails. For another thing, it is the duty of the pulpit and the press to apply the principles of Christian ethics to such matters more frequently and more faithfully than is common. For still another thing, there should be unity and strength of effort on the part of all good citizens to frown upon and to resist to the utmost all efforts at profitable graft, privilege and lawlessness, whether among politicians, public servants, bootleggers or dope dealers!

Democracy is the ideal form of Government only for an ideal people. A much higher standard of calibre, intelligence, character and unselfish patriotism is necessary if democracy is to give more efficient Government than under an autocracy, an oligrachy or a bureaucracy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

BY REV. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, D.D.

ISAIAH AND THE ASSYRIAN CRISIS.

Sunday, May 18th—II Kings, 18-20; Isaiah 36-38.

The highest title for any one in Scripture is "Man of God." This means that he was both godly and manly. It was specially used of prophets, and no one bore it more splendidly than Isaiah. He was one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of the prophets, as we shall see as we consider some of the main points of his career.

I.—The General History.

After the reign of Joash, considered in our last lesson, there were five Kings in Judah (see II Kings, 14 to 16). Amaziah was good, but weak; Uzziah or Azariah was also on the whole good, but spoilt all his long reign at the end; Jotham was wicked and so was his son, Ahaz. Then came Hezekiah, who was by far the best of them all, though there was a strain of weakness which needed the strong influence of Isaiah to meet and counteract.

The opening verse of Isaiah's book tells of the four Kings in whose reigns he prophesied, and it is important for us now to get circumstances of the time led up to the subject of our present lesson.

During the long reign of Uzziah (789-740 B.C.) Judah had become outwardly prosperous, but there was very little piety. The people were materialized, and there was no moral order (Isa. 1 to 5). Assyria was then the rising power in the East, and the Northern Kingdom was the first to feel its power. For a long time Judah was not involved in these relations of Israiel and Assyria, but at last the question pressed, and Israel and Syria united against Assyria, and pressed the weak King Ahaz to join them. In his extremity Ahaz called in the aid of Tiglathpileser of Assyria a fatal step, which brought on disaster, for Judah became tributary to Assyria. This is the keynote of Isaiah's prophecies in 7 and 8. Later on, when Tiglath-pileser was dead, Judah rebelled, and this led to the coming of Sennacherib and the story of Hezekiah, the godly successor of the sinful Ahaz. It is in relation to these circumstances of the reigns of Ahaz and Hezekiah that Isaiah's importance is mainly seen, and many of his prophecies can be understood only in the light of the power of Assyria, which was ever in the background.

II.—The Special Crisis.

His chief work, however, was accomplished in Hezekiah's reign. When Sennacherib came, the question arose as to whether Judah should make peace, Egypt was another power on the opposite side. Should it make an alliance and thus play off one against the other? Politicians at court were now on the side of Assyria, now on that of Egypt. What was to be done? The King hesitated sometimes tending to side with Assyria, at others turning to Egypt, but it became the splendid witness of Isaiah. His message was: "Do neither; stay quiet, trust and wait." Of course he was despised as unpractical and visionary, but from his point of view no one can question the absurdity of such a policy. But it was amply justified since Judah's people could never be properly understood from the merely human standpoint. In the story of Sennacherib we see an abundant vindication of Isaiah. He was ever at the right hand of the King, strengthening him, encouraging him to be faithful, declaring God's will and vindicating God's way.

III.—The Divine Intervention.

Now comes the deeply interesting story recorded in Isaiah 36 and 37, especially the latter.

1. The Threats of the King of Assyria, chapter 36. This boasting was met by silence, and then Hezekiah did the very best thing, he took it to God in prayer. God answered this by an encouraging message, and for a time the danger passed. But soon the attack was renewed, and this time by a letter, in which he tried to frighten Hezekiah by telling him of other nations.

2. The King's Response (37, 14-20). Once again he appealed to God, and his prayer is very beautiful in its attitude to God and its desire that God might be glorified.

3. The Divine Answer. Isaiah was soon sent to tell Hezekiah not to fear, because he should not be allowed to suffer, nor the city to be taken. In one of the finest passages in the Old Testament the prophet declares that there was no need of any concern, for God would show His greater power and save the city. Then God answered the letter and the King's prayer as well.

4. The Result. In some way, probably by a plague, God brought disaster on Assyria, and thus Jerusalem was delivered.

IV.—The Noble Prophet.

We must not fail to take note of the splendid service Isaiah rendered to his country, and in so doing we should try to get an idea of the man himself, one of the greatest of God's long line of witnesses.

1. His Life. Not much is known of Isaiah's personality. He was the son of Amoz and his name means "Jehovah saves." He was called in the year of Uzziah's death (6:1). He was married (8:3) and two sons of his are named (7:3; 8:1). He gathered round him a band of disciples (8:16). His life was lived almost wholly in the capital; indeed, he has been called by a well-known modern writer "Isaiah of Jerusalem." Some think he was a man of rank because of his intimacy with the King (7), and with the priest (8:2). Tradition says that he was "sawn asunder" in Manasseh's reign, and the allusion in Hebrews 11:37 is sometimes thought to be to this.

2. His Work. He stands out in a fourfold capacity, and as such is worthy of careful attention. He was a Reformer, denouncing abuses and sins against God. He was a statesman, enunciating the true national policy as one of genuine "isolation" from entangling alliances and from "materialy activity" while waiting on and for God. He was an author, the qualities of whose work place him in the highest rank in the literature of the world. Above all, he was a theologian, revealing and deepening the doctrines of God. He was the central figure in the reigns of Ahaz and Hezekiah; heroic, single-minded, patriotic, fearless, undaunted, a man of immense personal power and influence.

3. His Book. It is in three parts: Chapters 1-35, prophecies chiefly referring to the Assyrian period (the time of Isaiah's own life), and dealing with warning at present; chapters 36-39, history, looking back (ch. 36 and 37) and forward (ch. 38 and 39); chapters 40-66, prophecies chiefly referring to the Babylonian period (future to Isaiah's day), and speaking of comfort and hope. They are concerned with Isaiah's prediction of the captivity (ch. 39:6) and of Hezekiah 150 years before the event.

4. His Character. We must endeavor to discover the secret of the power of the whole of the life and service of this noble prophet. What was it that made him what he was? How came he to be such a powerful, deeply dauntless witness for his God?

(1) Faithfulness to God was the keynote of his life. How clear he was in all difficult circumstances, keen-sighted, a man of profound insight into difficult situations. How courageous he was in every conflict. Truth, at all costs was his determination. How calm he was in every crisis, whether against Egypt (9) or against Assyria (37). His own words were absolutely true of himself: "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength." And how consistent he was in his conduct. No one could point to a flaw in his behaviour. Although called upon to warn, threaten, denounce, he was always the true-hearted follower of his God, whom no one could convict of any inconsistency.

(2) Fellowship with God was the secret of his life. He walked with God and could therefore live for God. It was because God was real to him that God could be revealed by him. No one can study the various aspects of his teaching without being conscious that God was the great reality of Isaiah's life, and fellowship with Him was the prophet's supreme joy and simple secret of power.

(3) Faith in God was the foundation of his life. Here we touch the bed-rock of Isaiah's career. The vision of God in chapter 6 was the secret of everything. Faith in God led to fellowship, and fellowship, in turn, led to faithfulness. It is always so: these are the three elements of every true life and character. As we seek grace to reproduce these features, let us remember that in the great gallery of portraits given to us in the Old Testament there is no character more worthy of our study, more inspiring for our emulation, than the noble figure of Isaiah of Jerusalem. And so we may say, as we ponder his career: (4) faith enriches life; (2) faith ennobles character; (3) faith encounters opposition; (4) faith encourages trust, and (5) faith ensures victory (I John, 5-4).

ON PARLIAMENT HILL

BY A MEMBER OF THE PARLIAMENTARY PRESS GALLERY

Ottawa, May 5th, 1924.—The business of Parliament last week was transacted not so much in the House of Commons as in the committee-room of the Committee on Private Bills, where came under consideration a very famous bill in the name of Robert Forke, Progressive Leader—to wit, the Bill to incorporate the United Church of Canada.

Not in a decade—probably never before—has Ottawa seen such activity in connection with a private bill. Never before has there been crystallized behind potential legislation such a manifestation of public concern and curiosity. Never before have legislators been so given to feel the weight of public opinion. The capital is now, has been for more than a week, the camping ground of humdrum—clergymen, educationists, lawyers, prominent laymen of all walks of life and churchwomen of all creeds and classes and from all parts of Canada—all of them keeping a sharp eye on the progress of the measure sponsored by the member from Portage-la-Prairie.

The whole issue covered by the bill is extremely controversial, full of "dynamite" be it viewed from any angle whatsoever. Suffice it to say that, should the bill be sent forward from the committee, (and that is not at all certain, if one may judge by present circumstances) the legislation based thereon is apt to provide one of the stormiest debates in the history of Canada's Parliament. In a sense, the lucky member is one who is not on the roll-call of the committee meeting under the extremely diplomatic and judicial chairmanship of Hal. B. McGiverin (Liberal member for Ottawa).

PROGRESSIVES NOT LURED BY WOODSWORTH.

In view of the extraordinary interest manifested in the workings of the committee dealing with the Church Union Bill, proceedings in the House of Commons may be said to have taken second place. The outstanding feature of the Budget debate during the week was the frank disavowal by the Progressive Leader Robert Forke, of the amendment moved by S. Woodsworth, (Labor, Winnipeg Centre), which was accepted (as predicted in last week's letter it would be) by the Speaker. Although the Woodsworth amendment called for lower duties on the necessaries of life and for the imposition of land value and succession duties taxes, as approved in the platform of the Canadian Council of Agriculture, Mr. Forke explained in a few sentences that he, in his opinion, it was not entitled to his support. Approval, by vote, of that amendment, he said, made it appear that the Budget did not get and such action he did not deem to be in the best interest of the Grain Growers' Association represented by the group in this corner of the Chamber. In a few sentences, the Progressive chieftain explained whereby any of his followrs might escape from an embarrassing position. Most of them, probably, will avail themselves with the Liberals, not only on the Budget division, but as well, on that which will seal the fate of the Woodsworth amendment.

The Forke utterance on the Budget was one of the best delivered by its member in the Parliament since his advent into politics. It was brief, carefully-worded, optimistic in tone, restrained in sentiment, well-delivered and courageous. It accepted the Budget, not as all that western Canada might desire, but as a step forward, an earnest of good intentions and a document worthy of the support of Parliament. Progressive members of Parliament.

CONSERVATIVES STILL BUCKING C. N. R.

Conservative Opposition and the branch lines required by the Canadian National Railways, have been carried into the sessions of the Committe on Railways, Canals Telegraph Lines. Thus far, only one of the bills given first reading by the House has been before the committee, but its consideration was marked by a revival of the virtual obstruction that obtained in its earlies stages. Sir Henry Drayton seems to accept the role of chief obstructionist with a hearty goood-will that is more than a little mystifying to non-partisan folk on both sides of the publicly-owned road, who had been wont to regard the Conservative party in Canada as being quite as actively behind the Government as was any other. It may be, but Sir Henry Drayton has a strange way of showing his devotion, and that of his colleagues, to the principle and its application.

MR. MARLER VERSUS MR. McMASTER.

The much canvassed address on the Budget by Mr. Marler, K.C., of Montreal, proved to be a "dud." The member whose voice in parliament has come to be recognized as that of Montreal with a capital "M" talked for nearly two hours, without doing more than express his personal regret at a Budget that did not suit him and his friends. The House heard him patiently and with consideration—for Mr. Marler is a man whose voice is extremely unsuited to parliamentary debate—and then turned with relief to the good-humored eloquence of Andrew McMaster, the sturdy independent from Brome. Mr. McMaster was not at all times in a light vein. His portrayal of the disastrous eras through which Great Britain passed while her dreamers and agitators struggled for economic freedom for her common people led him into passionate oratory that drew unstinted applause from Liberals and Progressives. In a few deft sentences, Mr. McMaster—who, himself, recessed the floor last year on fiscal issues—dealt with Mr. Marler's renunciation of allegiance, turning back upon that gentleman the very words of censure with which he (Mr. Marler) had reproved Mr. McMaster's cross-the-carpet movement of last session.

PROPHECY VERSUS FACT

A gloomy contribution to the Budget discussion was that of T. J. Stewart (Conservative, Hamilton West) who told a tale of ruin about to befall the fair city under the mountain; ruin as inevitable as it was final and complete. To buttress his diatribe, Mr. Stewart read letters received by his firm from scores of Hamilton manufacturing concerns, each letter telling of injury received or expected, of the necessity of curtailing production cost and of decreasing personnel, and of leaving Canada to the undisputed possession of farmers and desolation. The letters did not sound quite so mournful, however, when the House recalled certain recent utterances of the Industrial Commissioner for Hamilton, C. W. Kirpkatrick, in which that expert in civic industrial affairs spoke with glowing optimism of Hamilton's immediate future. Mr. Kirkpatrick was reported in the "Hamilton Spectator" of April 25th, (two weeks after the big dustry-smashing Budget was tabled) as saying that industrial prospects in Hamilton were brighter than they had been for several years. Mr. Kirkpatrick went on to explain to the "Spectator" that he had been waited upon by the representatives of more than half a dozen manufacturing concerns desirous of locating in his city. Who, he named, as "definitely decided" to open up in Hamilton, the Werner G. Smith Company, manufacturers of corc oil and furniture supplies, and the S. A. Felton & Son Company, makers of industrial brushes. In other words, an interview with the Industrial Commissioner is much more re-assuring and probably more soundly based on fact than an address by his fellow-townsman, the member for Hamilton West.

Three-Mile Limit.

Much is being heard these days of "International Law" and the "three-mile limit." International law is in reality a gentleman's agreement and not a statutory law at all whereby each nation is entitled to jurisdiction over its own territorial waters. This term means, those fringes of the sea over which a nation could enforce its will from the sea coast, in other words, within cannon shot. At the time the agreement was made, the range of a cannon was only about three miles, so "Territorial Waters" were taken to mean all those seas with three miles of the nearest point of land. Though the range of modern artillery is infinitely greater, the "three-miles limit" is still generally taken as the boundary of each country's territorial waters. Within this limit, the sea counts as part of the nearest country.

CHEVROLET

—Compare Its Cost With Its Comfort and Convenience

So pronounced is the comfort, convenience and beauty of the Superior Chevrolet, that it is difficult to reconcile such quality with Chevrolet low price and economy. Yet the low cost of Chevrolet is an established fact.

Luxurious in its appointments is the new Chevrolet Superior Sedan—an avowed favorite with the lady driver. So handsome in upholstering—so exquisitely finished—its Fisher-built body seems designed for a much higher-priced car.

As for convenience, there is such ease of control in this new Chevrolet that driving is a genuine pleasure. Little space is required for parking, and the sureness of Chevrolet in starting, stopping and getting in and out of traffic, is still another point in its favor. For family use, the Chevrolet Superior Sedan has ample accommodation for five adults.

The mechanical excellence of Chevrolet requires no elaboration here. An investigation will convince you that Chevrolet is a car you can no longer afford to be without.

RT. HON. W. F. MASSEY.

Has Made a Name For Himself In New Zealand.

The Right Hon. William Ferguson Massey, Premier of New Zealand since 1912, who returned home through Canada from the Imperial Conference in London, is a well-known figure in New Zealand politics and has held at various times many important offices.

Mr. Massey is an Ulsterman, having been born at Limavady, County Derry, on the 26th March, 1856, the son of John Massey and Marian Ferguson, and received his earlier education at the public and secondary schools of his native county. He migrated to New Zealand to join his parents in 1870, they having previously gone out with the Non-conformist settlers in the year 1862.

Adopting farming as his profession, he eventually settled at Mangeret, Auckland. He married Christine C. B. E., the eldest daughter of Walter Pratt, Auckland, and has three sons and two daughters.

Mr. Massey became early associated with local government in his adopted country, and at different times held positions of member of Road Board, chairman of School Committee, president of Auckland Agricultural and Pastoral Association, and president of the Farmers' Club. He entered the New Zealand Parliament as member for Waitemata in 1894, and subsequently as member for Franklin since 1890. He became chief Opposition whip in 1895; leader of the Opposition 1903 and has held office in varying other capacities, including those of Minister of Lands, Agriculture, Industries and Commerce.

The New Zealand Premier was a representative in the Imperial War Cabinet 1917-1918, and again attended in London in a similar capacity at the Imperial and Economic Conferences last year. He was plenipotentiary at the Peace Conference in Paris in 1919, and has been honored in many other distinctive ways, holding amongst other things the Grand Officership of the Legion of Honor of France, and of the Crown of Belgium; besides being a Privy Councillor and an honorary degree man of manifold seats of learning. He has published many pamphlets and miscellaneous articles and takes a general interest in all sport.

Excellent.

A professor had been lecturing, and as he left the classroom he found that one of the students had dropped into his hat a card, upon which was drawn the picture of a donkey. He said nothing at the time, but the next day, when he stood before the class, he prefaced his lecture with the remark—

"Gentlemen, I have to thank one of your number for placing his card in my hat. He was too modest to leave his name, but his portrait was excellent."

Australia's Gold.

Gold production in Australia for the first nine months of 1923 totalled 526,614 fine ounces, compared with 551,790 ounces in the same period of 1922. The output of Western Australia amounted to 375,400 ounces; Queensland, 53,200; Victoria, 70,300, and New South Wales, 15,000. The shortage in 1923 is attributed to the curtailment of copper mining.

"WHAT IS ELECTRICITY?"

WAS RIDDLE ANSWERED BY NOBEL PRIZE WINNER.

(Special to the Star by United Press)

Pasadena, Cal., Nov. 16—Since the day Benjamin Franklin pulled down his kite string an electric spark from the skies, the world has sought the answer to the riddle "what is electricity?"

For answering that riddle, Dr. Robert A. Millikan, chairman of the executive council of the California Institute of Technology here, was awarded the Nobel prize of $40,000 for the greatest contribution to physical science in 1923.

Electricity, he has established, is an "atomic force"—a force composed of minute units called electrons. It derives its energy from the activities of these tiny particles.

Dr. Millikan has isolated and measured them in his labratory here—becoming the first man to see the "raw material" of which electricity is made.

This explanation, reduced to layman's English, means that electricity is a definite thing built of many tiny pieces; that when enough of these units are concentrated in one place the result is an electrical charge such as is in the storage battery of an automobile; and that the movements or vibrations of these units give electricity its energy; and their flow over a wire or through the atmosphere forms an electrical current.

THE ATOM.

Fifty years ago, remarks Sir Oliver Lodge, we did not know the atom had a structure; but it has now delivered up its secret, and is found to consist of very minute and concentrated electric changes revolving round a nucleus, as the planets revolve around the sun. The discovery is quite recent that the same system of law and order that reigns through the heavens holds equally in the interior of the atom, so that there is an atomic astronomy growing up before our eyes, leading us to wonder if there is any limit to smallness any more than there is any limit to bigness.

Among all these immensities man may appear insignificant, and hampered by his animal ancestry. He has much to contend against and overcome. Sometimes he seems evil and ugly, but he is immature. He is in the process of making.

COLOR ELECTRONS.

A remarkable theory has been evolved by Lord Clifford of Chudleigh, as the result of philosophical calculations, dealing with the constitution of matter, which as we now know, is composed in all cases of electrons or negatively electrified particles attached to central charges of positive electricity.

The result of his work, says Lord Clifford, has established that all wave-lengths that are smaller than 34,500 to the inch are what we term positive electricity, and all wave-lengths above 68,720 and below 103,078 to the inch constitute negative electrons. The intermediate waves, Lord Clifford suggests, should be called 'color electrons,' as all shades of color are produced by these waves of electricity.

The radiations of the ether which produce color are essential according to the theory, to the adhesion of the negative and positive electricity which constitutes atoms.

The new theory suggests that electrons themselves are inseparable from ether waves, and once the wave-length can be found of the radiation respensible for the combination of any one electron with any other, we shall be able to calculate the conditions under which all the elements are formed.

It opens up a vista of unlimited alchemy and foreshadows the day when the chemist will be able to make at will just what he desires.

Lord Clifford stated when interviewed: "I intend to try to ascertain if possible the relative figure at which the waves of electricity move to create the elements of matter. But I am afraid that until the electrical experimenters have carried their work further it will be a difficult undertaking."

PRINTED RECIPES ON DINING CARS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS GIVE PASSENGERS UNIQUE SERVICE.

Another innovation on the dining cars of the Canadian National Railways has been introduced by Walter Pratt, general manager of the sleeping, dining, parlor car and railway restaurant department. It consists of a postcard on which are printed two or more reasonable recipes of special popular dishes prepared by chefs of the dining cars.

Like many of the other popular features of the sleeping and dining car department, the Canadian National Railways, the recipe postcard is the out-growth of suggestions made by travellers over the lines of the system.

Scarcely a trip passes without a request being made to dining car stewards by women passengers for this or that recipe. These are always given, but Mr. Pratt considered, in view of the interest shown, it would be well to anticipate these requests, by having recipes printed in an attractive form and placed on the dining car tables where they would be available to such passengers as cared to make use of them. Their popularity has already been attested by the number which have been taken away by passengers. It is the intention of Mr. Pratt to change the recipes at frequent intervals so that the dishes will have the added attraction of being always seasonable.

Here and There

The Canadian Pacific steamer Empress of Britain will arrive at Quebec shortly on her first voyage from Liverpool as a cabin-class steamer under her new name Montroyal. She is the fastest vessel sailing out of Liverpool and is scheduled to run from there to Quebec in six and a half days.

British Columbia's payroll for 1923 was $150,000,000, according to the annual report of the Workman's Compensation Board. The payroll for 1922 was $128,592,502, and for 1921, $130,099,373. Employing firms operating at the end of last year numbered 6,524, an increase of 145 over the previous year.

The 1924 season for the port of Montreal was officially opened on the morning of the 18th of April, when the Government ice-breaker Lady Grey arrived in the harbor. A big season is anticipated, especially by the Canadian-Pacific steamships, whose vessels on the St. Lawrence route this year will exceed 197,000 gross tons.

Vancouver this season has beaten Portland, the great wheat port of the Northwest and formerly the great wheat port of the Pacific. Portland includes flour in its wheat totals, Vancouver does not. According to the Portland press the American city has moved over 29,000,000 bushels of wheat to date. Vancouver, in the same period, shipped 36,000,000 bushels, exclusive of a very considerable quantity of flour.

The much prized Wilder silver medal, the highest award of the American Pomological Society, the oldest horticultural body in North America, has been awarded to the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa for the sixth time. The medal on this occasion was given for the Lobo apple, one of the many fine varieties of McIntosh Red parentage originated at the Central Farm.

An estimate of $1,500,000 for fire protection and management of forest reserves has been placed before the Government for approval by the Minister of the Interior. The Minister stated that more drastic measures of fire prevention would be taken this year and in this connection the Department of the Interior proposes to utilize the Royal Canadian Air Force for the detection of fires.

An appeal for increased pensions for the originals of the old Royal North-West Mounted Police is now before the Federal Parliament. The present pensions are based on the pay standards of 20 to 30 years ago and are therefore quite inadequate, the appeal claims, and it is asked that they be raised to the same level as those granted members of the present Royal Canadian Mounted Police, on retirement.

"There is not a single geological reason why each and all of the world-famous mining camps, such as those of Kirkland Lake, Porcupine and Sudbury, should not be duplicated almost anywhere in the 850,000 square miles of the Quebec Laurentian Plateau, which stretches from the Ottawa and St. Lawrence Rivers to Hudson Strait," according to a statement made by T. C. Denis, Superintendent of Mines of the Province of Quebec, at a recent meeting of the Quebec branch of the Mining Institute of Canada.

Canada is financially sound. On April 14th the investors and savings account holders of the country were offered twelve million dollars worth of Canadian Pacific Railway five per cent bonds and by four o'clock that afternoon the issue had been over-subscribed and the books were closed. Telegraph orders came from all parts of the Dominion, a splendid evidence of the amount of money available for sound investment and the country's confidence in the future of the big railway. Another evidence is seen in the fact that small investors are putting savings into C.P.R. common stock which pays ten per cent on par value of $100,000. Since 1907, Canadian holdings of this stock have increased from 9.75 per cent to 21 per cent at the present time and holdings in the British Empire total about 76 per cent.

Treasure-Chests Under London.

Since the war every big building erected in London, England, has a treasure-chest, buried among the foundation deposit.

These chests contain articles which seem amusing to people of the present generation, but, looking ahead 500 or 1,000 years, it is conceivable they will be highly treasured by those who dig them up.

In one large hermetically-sealed box beneath a big building are a golden sovereign, a half-sovereign, a "fiver," a one-pound note, a ten-shilling note, a half-crown, two-shilling piece, shilling, sixpence, a penny, a half-penny, and a farthing. In another compartment there lies a copy of each morning newspaper and evening newspaper for the day on which the foundation stone was laid, and in another section there are bottles of whisky, beer, and wines.

Close by are packed bottles of scent, a bowler hat, a top hat, and papers representing the fashions of the time. In similar boxes are buried pictures of the royal family.

Imagine the feelings of the far-distant man who unearths these treasures! Perhaps, sitting among the ruins of the Strand, he will send long radio messages over the world about the silk hat, just as men are writing in wonder and admiration to-day about the sandals Tutankhamen wore.

Possibly in 1,000 years the superman will have arrived. Is it fair to speculate on the effect of whisky, beer, and wine on his highly-developed mentality?

In any case, it is safe to say that a box containing such article would teach a new race more about London society than was told to me by Mr. Seesue Hayakawa, the famous film actor.

When in Paris recently with his wife, Tsuri Aoki, the lady treated herself to a new hat—price three hundred francs.

Her husband pretended to be shocked at her extravagance.

"What!" he exclaimed. "Three hundred francs for a hat! Why, it's a sin!"

"Never mind," replied Mrs. Hayakawa, "the sin will be on my head."

Not Yet Anxious Over There.

They are not nervous in England over the circulation of Longfellow's "Evangeline," as some people in Canada profess to be. A writer in the Manchester Guardian, discussing the agitation to have "Evangeline" banished from Ontario schools, likens the spirit which fosters this movement to the very spirit which brought about the expulsion of the Acadians. He says:

When fanaticism sets its fangs in history and poetry as well as politics it is time to call a halt. One of Canada's ex-Ministers of Education, Dr. Cody, has discovered a pernicious influence in her educational system. The admission to its school books of Longfellow's epic, "Evangeline." This reverend Bangrado denounces the poem as demoralizing for the rising generation of Canadians, and an outrageous distortion of the historical facts. He declares he knows no poem with a more subtle influence to create a wrong yet indelible impression of British justice, chivalry and administration. He moves for its expulsion from Canadian school books, and as he has just been appointed chairman of the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto, there is a chance that he may get his way. He has collected around him a number of experts who join in the hue and cry, and rail against the poem from their several standpoints. One of them condemns, with some show of justice, its "tedious hexameters"; another, greatly negative, cannot regard it as "very good literature." So the mischief is loose, and, "Evangeline" must be hunted out of Canada, again, as her people were hunted out a century and a half ago. This, presumably in order that the Scriptures may be fulfilled which say that history repeats herself.

To Safeguard Northern Border.

Canada is to provide competition to the United States polar expedition by the dirigible Shenandoah next summer, but it will be by water. Capt. Bernier, noted Arctic explorer, is now in England, where he has taken charge of the steamer Franklin, acquired by the Federal Government.

Capt. Bernier will sail for the Arctic regions direct from Portsmouth, where the Franklin is now being fitted up for her expedition.

It is understood that a number of new posts will be established on the northern border, and it has even been said in certain reliable quarters that the Dominion Government is considering the advisability of sending a number of special representatives north next spring or summer to take formal charge of the islands already discovered, thereby eliminating the possibility of titles reverting to a foreign power.

The Sin On Her Head.

Apparently Japanese women are just as keen on pretty things to wear as are English women. Or at all events so it seems, judging from a story that was told to me by Mr. Seesue Hayakawa, the famous film actor.

Sent Up For Trial.

On Thursday morning, Hugh Carr, who was arrested by Provincial Officer Hy. Clark, on Wednesday, appeared before County Magistrate J. Bradshaw and was committed to stand trial on the charge of committing an indecent assault on a nine-year-old lad. It was one of the saddest cases that has ever come before the county magistrate. The young lad, who lived with his mother at Bellrock, has been confined to Kingston General Hospital for some time receiving treatment as a result of the assault which it is alleged was committed. The boy, who appeared rather weak and nervous, went into the witness box and told about the assault, which he claimed was committed on him by Hugh Carr, who for a short time was employed by his mother to do the work about the farm. After the little fellow had been giving evidence for a few minutes his nerves got the better of him, and he broke down and cried as though his heart would break. T. J. Rigney, K.C., who was prosecuting, took the lad on his knee, and talked to him and after he was given a piece of gum he continued his story. After hearing the evidence of the boy and two doctors, Magistrate Bradshaw stated that he was satisfied that there was enough evidence to commit the accused for trial. Carr has been in trouble before, and served in Portsmouth Penitentiary. At present he is out on parole. Constable Clark had been on the lookout for the man for some time, and located him near Napanee. He will remain in jail. Day and Revelle represent the accused.

SCOTTISH HOME RULE BILL

Uproar in British House When Debate on Bill Is Terminated.

LONDON, May 12.—The House of Commons closed Friday's session in an uproar, because the Speaker allowed the Scottish home rule bill, introduced by Mr. Buchanan, Glasgow Labor member, to be talked out. The trouble arose when Sir Robert Hogue, Conservative, was recognized by the Speaker to continue the debate. The Labor and Liberal members protested that Sir Robert was the third of the Opposition to be called on for remarks, and Sir Robert thereupon said he would reserve his remarks for a later occasion.

While Mr. Adamson, a Labor member, was speaking at one minute before 4 o'clock, which was closing time, a number of Scotsmen on the Ministerial benches tried to move closure, but the Speaker declined to accept it, and the time for discussion expired.

In the ensuing uproar, David Kirkwood, Labor member for Dunbarton, was prominent, while Rev. Campbell Stephen, Labor member for Glasgow, and Mr. Buchanan, who previously had been suspended from the Speaker's Chair, were also vociferous. Pandemonium reigned for several minutes until the Speaker declared the House adjourned.

William Adamson, Secretary for Scotland, on behalf of the Government, approved the principle of the bill, which provides for the establishment in Scotland of a single-Chamber Parliament of 148 members, while Scotland continues her present representation in the House of Commons until a general devolution scheme is instituted for the United Kingdom.

Secretary Adamson said he hoped the bill would be given second reading by an overwhelming majority. However, it involved a vital issue of equal importance to the English and Welsh people, the Government was prepared to appoint a committee to examine the whole question and report thereon to the House of Commons.

The Liberals also supported the measure, which had been moved by G. Buchanan, Labor member for Gorbals, Glasgow. The Gorbals' member claimed that the Scots had favored the scheme almost unanimously in order to relieve the congestion of business that came up in the House of Commons.

BIG STEAMERS IN TROUBLE

One Liner in Collision Is Able to Make Her Way to Port.

NEW YORK, May 12.— Four steamships were in trouble at sea during the week-end, and rough weather added to their difficulties.

The Ontario, with 43 passengers on board, bound for Boston, caught fire about o'clock Friday morning off Block Island.

The Royal Mail Liner Orca collided with the steamship Porsanger about the same time, 40 miles east of the lighthouse at Fathes Point, Que., near the same place where 10 years ago the Empress of Ireland was sunk by the Norwegian collier Storstadt, with a loss of upward of 1,300 lives.

No one was injured and while the loosened rivets of the Orca started her leaking, the leak was without difficulty controlled by the pumps and Capt. Matthews proceeded with his ship to New York.

The Cunard liner Berengaria, due in Quarantine at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon, with Cardinal Mundelein and his retinue, turned back when she reached a position within 160 miles of Ambrose Light to-day, to meet the steamship Major Wheeler, from Boston to Baltimore, for life medical aid to members of the Wheeler's engine-room crew, injured in an explosion.

All the ships were able to proceed, and the Ontario reached Boston safely shortly before 4 p.m. The fire was confined to a few bales of cotton and the vessel was not damaged.

Thrown 25 Feet by Bull.

GRAVENHURST, May 12.—Herman Coon, a well-known local dairyman, nearly yesterday gored by a ferocious bull and thrown over a distance of 25 feet, landing against a wagon. Immediately the bull made a second charge, goring him in the head, leaving the unfortunate man in a helpless condition. Fear of a fractured skull is expressed by attending physicians and his condition is considered critical.

Will Likely Resign.

TOKIO, May 12.—Resignation of the Government of Premier Kiyoura at an early date is forecast by the morning papers to-day on the basis of official returns from Saturday's Parliamentary elections.

Official returns received up to one a.m. to-day gave the Seyuhonto, considered the Kiyoura party, only 32 of 162 seats decided.

POINCARE MAY REMAIN

Early Election Returns Indicate a Democratic Victory

Leaders of Moderate Left Increase Their Following, But It Is Doubtful if They Will Have Sufficient Strength to Imperil Government.

PARIS, May 12.—At two o'clock this morning the returns in yesterday's Parliamentary elections indicate large gains by the Moderate Left chiefs, Briand, Herriot and Painleve. The incomplete figures justify assuming that they have already wrested 20 seats from the National bloc, of which Poincare is the chief.

Paris gave a majority to the Nationalists, but outside the capital the radical Socialists and associated parties made heavy inroads in the majority of the old Chamber, which was generally considered to be about 80.

Owing to the complicated system of counting in French elections, complete returns are not yet in. The indications are against the gains the Communists expected. The Reds are strongest in the large cities, and the Paris returns make it appear that they will add few, if any, members to their group of 12 in the expiring Chamber of Deputies.

One of the notable casualties in the voting is Andre Tardieu, head of the Clemenciists, who was defeated in the Seine-et-Oise. Count de Lafferyne, former Finance Minister, lost in the Correze, while Manoury, former Minister of the Interior, is also defeated so far as is known, though none of the members of the present Cabinet has met disaster.

F. Arago, leader of the Entente Republicains, the most powerful party in the Bloc National, has been beaten. Forty-five of the 90 departments are almost certainly clinched for the bloc.

The election means M. Poincare can no longer dominate France's foreign policy. It means France has returned to the old democratic standards, breaking to some extent the power of money. It means France refuses to continue the Conservatives in power merely from fear of Germany.

If M. Poincare wants to continue in office, he must trim his sails to meet this change.

How he and President Millerand are going to take the Conservative defeat is unknown, but all France wishes he can shift to the Left, but it is questionable whether Briand and Herriot will let him.

They favor active co-operation with Prime Minister MacDonald of England in settling reparations and evacuating the Ruhr. They can completely upset the Government, but it is not certain they will. M. Poincare himself can also settle with Mr. MacDonald before the new Chamber meets.

The Left victory is tempered by one condition which makes the attitude of its two chief leaders uncertain. This condition is that there are on the Left Bloc lists of the names of many deputies who will not throw the Premier out. Senator Guilhe, like Mark Hanna of this election, has succeeded in electing many moderates in the Left Bloc lists who will not vote with the Left in rejecting the Premier at once.

Scandinavians Arrive.

HALIFAX, May 12.—Two transatlantic westbound passenger boats this week-end to set down passengers.

The Scandinavian-American liner Frederick VIII., Captain Machlenburg, Copenhagen to New York, arrived Saturday afternoon and landed nine cabin and two hundred and eleven third-class passengers, practically all of whom left for the Scandinavian West. Sunday afternoon the Norwegian-American liner Stavangerfjord arrived from Christiania and and landed thirteen cabin and one hundred and sixty-one third-class passengers.

Three weddings took place in the immigration sheds here Saturday afternoon shortly after the arrival of the Frederick VIII. The contracting parties include a Swede, a Norwegian and Finnish pair. The three brides were given away by Immigration Officer F. W. Hetherington, who has given in marriage between 500 and 1,000 immigrant women.

Piled on Rocks.

NEW YORK, May 12.—With her bows sunk, her ribs torn from the keel and her engines stuck fast on a rock, the 50-foot racing boat May, fastest craft in the bootlegging service, lay on Ward's Island to-day. Down the East river and in the Upper Bay scores of men in row-boats and launches were salvaging cases of Scotch and whiskey which the May had cast overboard in her flight.

The May had crashed on the rocks when going at full speed at the end of a ten-mile race with the police boat Gypsy at dawn this morning. The four men on board were flung into the sand-spit and were so badly hurt that they could not run, and all four were arrested.

Russo-Rumanian Situation.

ROME, May 12.—Special reports to the Corriere d'Italia declare that the situation is extremely grave on the Russo-Rumanian frontier, and that the concentration of Russian troops makes a clash possible, since detachments of Rumanian troops have been hurriedly sent to the border.

Good Advice From Thief.

WINNIPEG, May 12.—Police today are looking for a thief who broke into night left a sarcastic note of warning in a house which he had robbed. The note, which was found on a dining-room table read: "Keep your windows locked after this." He stole $10.

Wire Through Heart.

INGERSOLL, May 12.—While removing the heart from a cow that had just killed a local butcher made a strange discovery on Friday. Firmly embedded in the organ was a piece of small wire about eight inches in length. The wire had not been noticed until the knife came in contact with it. The wire had entered the heart at one side and had penetrated almost through the organ. It was with difficulty that the piece of wire was pulled from the heart, and it seems remarkable that it had not caused the death of the cow.

APPEAL TO AMERICANS

Japan Protests Against Exclusion Legislation

Superintendent of American Baptist Foreign Mission Will Appeal to American People for More Generous Treatment of Japanese in America.

VICTORIA, B.C., May 12.—Carrying a personal protest from Premier Kiyoura of Japan against the United States Japanese exclusion legislation, W. W. Axling, superintendent of the American Baptist Foreign Mission society, arrived here Saturday on his way to the United States, where he will appeal to the whole American people for more generous treatment of Japanese in America.

Mr. Axling brought with him a typewritten statement crediting the Japanese Premier with an appeal to the United States to reconsider its exclusion legislation. He quoted the Premier as saying:

"Of course, the Jingoes talk of war, but the time has passed when the sword should settle international disputes."

The Japanese Premier, Mr. Axling said, has asserted the Washington Disarmament Conference had brought about a new day in international affairs, and if America and Japan would continue to see eye to eye, peace of the Pacific would be assured.

"I cannot but feel that America has gone astray," the Japanese Premier was quoted as saying. He added, however, he was confident America's sense of justice and fair play would cause a change in her exclusion policy. It was for the church, he asserted, to awaken the Christian conscience of America to the great moral issue involved.

The Premier and Japanese leaders, Mr. Axling said, feel that the present issue is racial and not confined to immigration. Japan is willing, they told Mr. Axling, to cut down immigration to an inconsiderable number, realizing that a large immigration would only create new problems.

Mr. Axling said that underneath the outward calm in Japan there is an intense feeling of resentment over the American exclusion legislation. Only strong measures by the Government, he said, had prevented serious demonstrations.

Must Return Deposits.

TORONTO, May 12.—Having completed their investigations into the money paid by the Home Bank to depositors and others on the final day of the Bank's closing, the liquidators have stated that all money paid illegally to people who evidently had a tip that the Bank was to close, must be returned. Some money was paid after closing hours, and it is such payments which are termed illegal. The amount is said to run to considerable sum, and will be between $15,000 and $20,000 has been returned. The liquidators will take action in cases where refunds are not made.

Approximately 3000 out of the 1,760 shareholders of the Home Bank have paid their double liability, and as a result the sum of $2,000,000 has been collected out of a total of $2,000,000 due. Those who have not yet paid have put in a claim covering their liability and the call will be made by the liquidators to collect. Four directors who have paid their double liability are Lt.-Col. Clarence Smith, Montreal, $5,000; F. B. Russell, $5,000; S. Casey Wood, $4,000; and J. F. M. Stewart, $4,000. The directors who have not paid are H. J. Daly, R. P. Gould, F. A. Mitchell, and C. A. Barnard.

Princess Patricias Parade.

TORONTO, May 12.— Reviving memories of glorious deeds and magnificent sacrifices, the Toronto veterans of one of Canada's most famous regiments, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, held their annual parade to divine service in St. James' Cathedral yesterday evening.

Pitifully few in number was the little band of 50 veterans who marched brought to the crowds of Sunday walkers, who lined the route of march, a lesson of unselfishness and devotion to duty, pointed by an example scarce equalled in modern history. In the kindly afternoon sunshine almost 100 battle-scarred heroes marched, with proud step and heads held high, behind the Pipe Band of the 48th Highlanders from the College Street Armories to the stately pile of St. James'.

Mrs. Ella Harriss Dies.

OTTAWA, May 12.—Mrs. Ella Beatty Harriss, wife of Rev. Charles Harriss, internationally known conductor of choirs, died at her residence, Earnscliffe, Sunday. Dr. Harriss, who is conducting the Imperial Choir at the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley, arrived from London to be at the bedside of his wife before she died. Mrs. Harriss was the daughter of the late Prof. John Beatty, formerly Professor of Chemistry at Victoria University, Cobourg, and Eleanor Armstrong, of U.E.L. descent.

She was a gracious hostess to many notable personages at her residence, Earnscliffe, the official residence of Sir John A. Macdonald.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, May 12.— Heavier receipts of cattle and quality of steers were received at the Union Stock Yards last week, but a demand for the overseas market was equal to the increased offering, and prices were firm to strong. The seaboard were consequently the biggest for the year, and totalled about 2,000, which, added to 1,000 taken by U. K. through loads. The export trade was the feature of the week, and it is expected that the demand will continue for two or three weeks to come. Prices in this section of the market remained steady.

Small lots of choice handyweight steers sold as high as $8 per cwt., with the bulk from $7 to $7.50 and other grades downward to $6. Cows had a fresh market from $5 to $6.25 for good to choice butchers, with canners and most of the heavy bulls from $4.50 to $5.50, while bologna and medium quality bulls sold from $3 to $4. There were few sales of stockers and feeders on the week. Milkers and springers of the best quality brought from $65 to $85.

The hog market strengthened early in the week on light receipts, but the close was unsettled. Sales were made up to Wednesday on a basis of $8 fed and watered, or from $8.25 to $8.50 off cars. On the midweek market packers were offering $8.25 per cwt. fed, but the trade on Thursday was unsettled, and the best selling made from $7.75 to $8.40 off cars.

A strong trade continued in sheep and lambs as a result of light offerings. Spring lambs were a little stronger, bringing from $10 to $15.50 each. Odd lots of yearlings sold from $11 to $14. Sheep were steady, the best handyweights gaining from $5.50 to $10.50 per cwt.

The offering of calves was smaller last week and prices strengthened 50c per cwt. on the week. Vealers generally ranged from $10.50 to $11 per cwt., with an odd sale at $12. The bulk of the receipts graded common to medium and best steady at $8 to $8.50. One load was shipped to Buffalo.

IS THE O. T. A. A SUCCESS?

"SAY IT WITH CURTAINS!"

Says a certain Social Service worker whose white hairs haven't bleached her sense of humor, "I'll say the O.T.A. is a success. In fact, I'll say it with curtains!"

Naturally, we didn't get that. So she took us down to let us see the saying in process of demonstrating itself. But first she described Mary H's house as it used to be.

"There wasn't any need to label it a drunkard's home," she said. No paint. Hardly a whole pane of glass; rags stuffed in; and not a curtain you could call a curtain on the whole place. Inside, it was worse. There wasn't a piece of furniture that wasn't all there. The family of seven slept in two beds; and what they spoke of as bedding would be despised by a well-bred dog.

"Mary went out to work, so she never was home unless I called in the evening. And then, sometimes she didn't particularly want to see me, even if I was her best friend. She didn't want to have to explain her black eye, and nobody could take a thing like that for granted. Mary could have spoiled that for example any day; though whether the horror was that she should have married John—or that such a kind, sober, man could turn into such a fiend when drunk—or that such a nice, God-fearing community as ours could permit the procedure, I don't think she quite realized herself.

"One day, worn out with life in general, she said to John, 'Oh John, when will you give up this drinking?'

"'I'll never forget the sombre hopelessness of her face, as she told me his answer.

"'When I can't get it any more, and not a minute sooner.'

"Well, I moved away from that community, and during my absence the O.T.A. was passed. Last month I went back and it occurred to me to look up Mary.

"At this point, the story of the past changed into a demonstration of the present, for the Social worker took me to the street where Mary lives, and stood in front—you should have seen the house! It couldn't ever be pretty, any more than grandmother's can be pretty. But it didn't have a cracked pane, or a rag, or a dirty window—and the whole place had fairly broken out with curtains. They weren't merely white. They flaunted themselves. They didn't merely hang straight. They frilled at their three starched edges. If the morning stars sang together once upon a time, Mary's curtains unquestionably sang for joy, as far as any one could see them.

What did they say?

"Well," the Social worker said they said, "Praise God for blessings day by day; but most, of course, for the O.T.A."

Inside, Mary told us proudly that she only went out occasionally, now. She didn't have to work half. Her man did that.

"And brings home his money?" the Social worker asked.

"All but two dollars," Mary said, "And you know, Miss, in the old days, if he brought home anything it would have been the two dollars. He'd have spent the rest himself."

The shadow of the old years seemed to fall across her as she spoke. She leaned forward and whispered. "When I think what I've lived through——— that I thought they'd never stop the awful liquor traffic back, I'd lay down and die."

Herbert had spent the first four years of his life in an apartment house where pets were unknown, but he had had experience with motor cars. So when he was visiting his aunt and found the family cat dozing comfortably in the sunny window, and purring steadily, he cried, excitedly:

"Auntie, come quick! This cat has gone to sleep and left his engine running."

Hamish smiled. Roland had disclosed the fact in family conclave, of his having applied for the place of bailiff to Sir Vincent; Annabel being present. He had recited, so far as he could remember them, the very words of the letter, over which Hamish had laughed himself into a coughing fit.

"To be sure," answered Hamish, with a touch of his old jesting spirit. "Gerald may have brought up your appointment, Roland."

That was quite enough. "I'll go and ask him," said Roland eagerly. "Any way he may be able to tell me how Dick received it."

Away went Roland on the spur of the moment. It was a clear, cold evening, the air sharp and frosty; and Roland ran all the way to Mrs. Gerald Yorke's. That lady was not in tears this evening; but her mood was a gloomy one, her face fractious. The tea was on the table, and she was cutting the bread-and-butter for the three little girls sitting so quietly round it, before their cups of milk and water. Gerald had gone out again; she did not know where, whether temporarily, or to his chamber for the night, or anything about him.

"I think something must have gone wrong at Sunny Mead," observed Winny. "When I asked what brought him back so soon, he only swore. Perhaps Sir Vincent refused to lend money, and they had a quarrel. I know Gerald meant to ask him: he is in dreadful embarrassment."

"Mamma," plended a little voice, "there's no butter on my bread."

"There's as much as I can afford to put, Kitty," was Mrs. Yorke's answer. "I must keep some for tea in the morning. Suppose your papa should find no butter for breakfast, if he comes home to sleep to-night! My goodness!"

"Bread and scrape's not good, is it Kitty?" said Roland.

"No," plaintively answered the child.

Roland clattered out, taking the stairs at a leap. Mrs. Yorke supposed he had left without the ceremony of saying good-night.

"Just like his manners!" she tractionsly cried. "But oh! don't I wish Gerald was like him in temper!"

Roland had not gone for the night. He happened to have a shilling in his pocket, and went to buy a sixpenny pot of marmalade. As he was skimming back with it, his eye fell on some empty wrings, exposed for sale on a fishmonger's board. The temptation (with the loose sixpence in his hand) was not to be resisted. He carried in the treasures. And when the three little ones were very meek spirited, they would have shouted at the sight. Roland lavishly spread the marmalade on the bread-and-scrape, and began pulling out shrimps for the company round, while he talked of Hamish.

"They are writing their short reviews that were so harsh upon his book, have helped to kill him," said Mrs. Yorke, in a low tone, turning from the tea to face Roland.

"But for those reviews he'd not have died," answered Roland. "I never will believe it. Illness might have come on, but he'd have had the spirit to throw it off again."

"Yes. When I sit and look at him, Roland, it seems as if I and Gerald were wretches that ought to hide ourselves. I say to myself, it was not my fault; but I feel it for all that."

"Why what do you mean?" asked Roland.

"About the reviews. I can't bear to go there now."

"What about the reviews?"

"It was Gerald who wrote them."

Roland, for convenience's sake, had the plate of shrimps on his knee during the picking process. He rested from his work and stared in a kind of puzzle. Winny continued.

"Those reviews were all Gerald's doings. That dreadful one in the Snarler he wrote himself, here, and was two days over it, getting to it at times in a sad and strong words occurred to him to make it worse and worse—just as he wrote the one of praise on his own book. The other reviews, that were for every, Gerald he got written. I read every word of the one in the Snarler in manuscript. I wanted to tell him it was wicked, but he might have shaken me. He said he owed Hamish Channing a grudge, and should get his book damned. That's not my word, you know, Roland. And all the while, it was Hamish who was doing so much for me and the poor children, finding us in food when Gerald did not."

No whiter could Hamish Channing's face look when the marble paleness of death should have overshadowed it, than Roland's was now. For a short while it seemed as though the communication were too astounding for admittance to his mind. Suddenly he rose up with a great cry. Down went shrimps, and plate, and all; and he was standing upright before Mrs. Yorke.

"Is it true? Is it true?"

"Why, of course it's true," she fractiously answered, for the movement had startled her. "Gerald did it all. I'd not tell anybody but you, Roland."

Throwing his hat on his head, hind part before, away dashed Roland. Panting, wild, his breath escaping him in great sobs, like unto one who has received some strong mental shock, he arrived at Mr. Channing's in a frantic state. Vague ideas of praying at Hamish's feet for forgiveness were surging through his brain —for it seemed to Roland that he, as Gerald's brother, must be in a degree responsible for this terrible thing. The door opened, he turned into the dining-room, and found himself in the presence of—Gerald. Hamish, feeling unusually weak, had gone up to bed, and Gerald was waiting the signal to go to him. Of all the torrents of reproach ever flung at a man, Gerald found himself astounded by about the worst. It was not loud; Roland might have carried off something of the kind; but painfully sad and bitter. He stood on the hearth-rug in front of Gerald as he had but now stood before Gerald's wife; with the same white and stricken face; with the same agitation shaking him from head to foot. The shrimps were broke from him in jerks; the voice was a wail.

"Was it not enough that I brought disgrace on Arthur Channing in the years gone by, but you, another of us ill-doing Yorkes, must destroy Hamish?" panted Roland. "Good Lord! why did heaven suffer us two to live! As true as we are standing together here, Gerald, had I known at the time those false reviews were yours, I should have broken your bones for you!"

"You shut up," retorted Gerald. "It's nothing to you."

"Nothing to me! Nothing to me, when one of the best men that ever lived on earth has been wilfully sent to his grave? Yes; I don't care how you may salve-over your conscience, Gerald Yorke, it is murder, and nothing less. What had he done to you? He was a true friend, a true, good friend to you and to me: not one word against us had he committed, that you should treat him like this?"

"If you don't go out of the house, I will," said Gerald, but Roland never seemed to so much as hear it.

"Who do you suppose has been helping you all this year?" demanded Roland. "When you were afraid of the county-court over a boot bill, somebody paid the money and sent you the receipt anonymously: who has been buying your wife and children rent and clothes and food and all kinds of comforts, while you gave wine parties in your chambers, and went touring it on to see us for weeks in people's yachts? Hamish Channing. He deprived himself of his holiday, that your wife and children might be fed, you abandoning them; he has lived sparingly in spite of his failing health, that you and yours might profit. You and he were brought up by the same plain boys together, and he could not see your children want. They've never had a fraction of help but what it came from Hamish and his wife."

"It is a lie," said Gerald. But he was staggered, and he half felt that it was not.

"It is the truth, as heaven knows," cried Roland, breaking down with a burst. "Ask Winny, she told me. I'd have given my own poor worthless life freely, to save the pain of those false and cruel reviews to Hamish."

Sheer emotion stopped Roland's tongue. Mrs. Channing, entering, found the room in silence; the storm was over. Roland was good, Gerald amazingly uncomfortable, had a mind to run away there and then.

"Will you come up, Gerald?" she said.

Hamish lay in bed in his large cheerful chamber, bright with fire and light. His head was raised; one hand was thrown over the white coverlid; and a cup of tea waited on a stand by the bed-side. Roland stood by the fire, his chest heaving.

"Is it you, Gerald?" the feeble cry demanded Hamish. "What has put you out?"

"It is this, Hamish—that I wish I could have died instead of you," came the answer at last, with a burst of grief.

He sat down in the shade in a quiet corner, for his brother's step was heard. As Gerald approached the bed, he visibly recoiled. It was some time since he had seen Hamish, and he verily believed he stood in the presence of death. Hamish held out his hand with a cheering smile, and his face grew bright.

"Dear old friend, I thought you were never coming to see me."

Gerald Yorke was not wholly bad. With the dying man before him, with the truths he had just heard beating in his ears, he nearly broke down as Roland had done. Oh, that he could undo his work! that he could recall life to the fading spirit as easily as he done his best to take it away.

"I did not think you were so ill as this, Hamish. Can nothing be done?"

"Don't let it grieve you, Gerald. Our turn must all come, sooner or later. Don't, old fellow," he added, in a whisper. "I must keep up for Ellen's sake."

Gerald bent over him: he thought they were alone. "Will you forgive me?"

"Forgive you!" repeated Hamish, not understanding what there was to forgive.

And Gerald, striving against his miserably pricking conscience, could not bring himself to say. No, though it had been to save his own life, he dared not confess to his cowardly sin.

"I have not always been the good friend to you I might, Hamish. Do say you forgive me, for heaven's sake!"

Hamish took his hand, a sweet smile upon his face. "If there is anything you want my forgiveness for, Gerald, take it. Take it freely. Gerald, when we begin to realize the great fact that our sins are forgiven, forgiven and washed out, you cannot think how glad we are to forgive others who may have offended us. But I don't know what I have to forgive in you."

Gerald's chest heaved. Roland's, in his distant chair in the shade, heaved rebelliously.

"I had ambitious views for you, Gerald. I meant to do you good if I could. I thought when my book was out and had brought funds to me, I would put you straight. I thought of you nearly as much as I thought of myself: one of my dear old friends of dear old Helstonleigh. The world is fading from me, Gerald; but the old scenes and times will be with me to the last. Yes, I had hoped to benefit you, Gerald, and I was otherwise ordained. God bless you, dear friend. God love and prosper you, and bring you home to Him."

Gerald could not stand it any longer. As he left the room and the house, Roland went up to the bed with a burst, and blessed all. He have kept in the secret would have choked him. A moment of exquisite pain for Hamish; a slight, short struggle with the human passions, not yet quite dead within his aching breast; and then his loving kindness resumed its sway, never again to quit him.

"Bring him back to me, Roland; bring him back that I may send him on his way with words of better comfort," he whispered.

CHAPTER XL

Godfrey Pitman's Tale.

Shut in with closed doors, George Winter told his tale. Not quite all he could tell; and not the truth in one very important particular. If that single item of fact might be kept secret to the end, the speaker's will was good for it. On the table-cover lay pens and ink and paper, for Mr. Greatorex sometimes wrote at night in his room, as the fancy took him. Kene were near each other; the clergyman was almost within the shadow of the window-curtain; Bede and Hook in silhouette on the opposite side of the table, telling his tale, with the light of the bright winter's day falling upon him, like shining every line of his face. was George Winter. And, at right angles with the whole assemblage, his keen eyes and ears taking in every word and look in silence, stood the detective, Jonas Butterby. Mr. Greatorex, in spite of his son Bede's protestations, had refused to sanction any steps for the release of Alletha Rye from custody. As for Butterby, in that matter he seemed more inexorably hard than a granite stone. "Show us that the young woman is innocent before you talk about it," said they both with reason. And so George Winter had in to tell what he knew; and Mr. Greatorex—not to speak of some of the rest—felt that his senses were temporarily struck out of him, when he listened.

Godfrey Pitman, at his physician's command, had left him, disguised, and under the false name of Pitman, to Mrs. Jones's house at Helstonleigh, George Winter passed to the night of the tragedy, and to the events which had taken him back to the house after his departure from it in the afternoon. If ever Mr. Greatorex wore an eager light, it was then, not the faintest turn of a look, not the smallest syllable was lost upon him.

"When I had been a week at Mrs. Jones's, I began to think it might be unsafe to remain longer," he said; "and I resolved to take my departure on the Monday. I let it transpire in the house that I was going to Birmingham by the early down train. This was to put people off the scent, for I did not mean to go by that train at all, but by a later one in an opposite direction, and then by night o'clock train for Oxford; and I had thought to wait about, near the station, until that hour. At half-past four I said good-by to Mrs. Jones and went out: but I had not gone many yards from the door, when I saw one of the Birmingham police, who knew me personally. I had my disguises on, the spectacles and the false hair, but I feared he might recognise me spite of them. I turned my back for some minutes, apparently looking close into a shop window, and when the officer had disappeared, stole back to Mrs. Jones's again. The door was open, and I went upstairs without being seen, intending to wait until dusk."

"A moment, please," interrupted Mr. Greatorex. "It would seem that this was about the time that Mr. Ollivera returned to Mrs. Jones's. Did you see him?"

"I did not, sir; I saw no one."

"Go on."

"I waited in my room at the top of the house, and when night set in, began to watch for an opportunity of getting away unseen by the household, and so avoid questionings as to what had brought me back. It seemed not too easy of accomplishment: the servant girl was at the street door, and Alfred Jones (as I had ascertained) was then in and again, locked myself in. He went into his own, and soon I heard him go down and quit the house. In a few minutes I went out of my room again with my blue bag, ready for departure, and stood on the stairs to reconnoitre—"

"Can you explain the cause of those grease spots that we have heard of?" interrupted Bede Greatorex at this juncture. And it might also have seemed from the slightly emotion of his tone, which could not be wholly suppressed, that he dreaded the revelation he knew must be coming, and put the question only to delay it.

"Yes, sir. While Alfred Jones was in his room, I dropped my silver pencil-case, and had to light a candle to seek it. I suppose that, in searching, I must have held the candle aside and let the drops of tallow fall on the carpet."

"Go on," again interposed Mr. Greatorex impatiently. "You went out on the stairs with your bag. What next?"

The witness—if he may be termed such—passed his hand slowly over his forehead before answering. It appeared as though he were recalling the past.

"As I stood there on the top of the first flight, the sound of voices in what seemed like angry dispute, arose from the drawing-room. One in particular was raised in passionate fury; the other was less loud. I did not hear what was said; the door was shut—"

"Were they both men's voices?" interrupted Mr. Ollivera—and it was the first question he had put.

"Yes," came the answer; but it was given in a low tone, and with somewhat of hesitation. "At least, I think so."

"Well."

"The next thing that I heard was the report of a pistol, followed by a cry. Another cry succeeded to it in a different voice, as a cry of horror; and then silence supervened."

"And you did not go in?" exclaimed Mr. Ollivera in agitation, taking a step forward.

"No. I am aware it is what I ought to have done; and I have reproached myself later for not having done it; but I felt afraid to disclose to anyone that I was yet in the house. It might turn out to be the enemy of who and what I was. Besides, I thought there was no great harm done; I declare it, upon my honor. I could not imagine suicide within the room as of some one, or more, moving about, and I certainly heard one voice speaking low and softly. I thought it was my opportunity for slipping away, and had crept down nearly to the drawing-room door, when it suddenly opened, very quietly, and a face looked out. Whoever it might be, I suppose the sight of me scared them, for they retreated, and the door was reclosed softly. Then one also sending me back upstairs; and I remained up until the same person, as I supposed, came again, descended the stairs, and left the house. I got out myself then, gained the railway station by a circuitous route, and got safely away from Helstonleigh."

As the words died upon the ear, there ensued a pause of silence. The clergyman broke it. His mind seemed to be running on one string.

"Mr. Brown, was that person a man or a woman?"

"Oh, it was a man," answered Mr. Brown, looking up at his physician's coat, and brushing a speck off it with an air of carelessness. But something in his demeanor at that moment struck two people in the room as being peculiar—Judge Kene and Mr. Butterby.

"Should you recognise him again?" continued the clergyman.

"I cannot say. Perhaps I might."

"And you can stand there, Mr. Brown, and deliberately avow that you did not know a murder had been committed?" interposed the sternly condemning voice of Mr. Greatorex.

"On my sacred word of honor, I declare to you, that no suspicion of it at the time occurred to me," answered the clerk, turning his eyes with fearless honesty on Mr. Greatorex. "When I got to learn what had really happened—which was not for some weeks—I wondered at myself. All I could suppose was, that the fear and apprehension I lay under on my score had rendered me callous to other impressions."

"Proceed," was Mr. Went in, close upon the heels of Mr. Bede Greatorex, and did this cruel thing?" asked Judge Kene, with quiet emphasis, as he looked in the face of the narrator.

"No," as quietly, and certainly as calmly, came the answer, "I had no cause to injure Mr. Ollivera. I never saw him in my life. I am not sure that I knew there was a barrister of the name. I don't think I ever heard of him until after he was in the grave where he is now lying."

"But—you must have known Mr. Ollivera was sojourning in Mrs. Jones's house at the same time that you were?"

"I beg your pardon, Sir Thomas; I did not know that any one was lodging there except myself. Miss Rye, whom I saw for a few minutes occasionally, never mentioned it, neither did the servant, and they were the only two inmates I conversed with. As all I knew, or thought, Mrs. Jones occupied the drawing-room herself. I once saw her sitting there, and the maid was carrying out the tea-tray. No," emphatically concluded the speaker, "I did not know Mr. Ollivera was in the house; and if I had known it, I should not have sought to harm him."

The words were simple enough; and they were true. Judge Kene, skilled in reading tones and looks, saw that much. The party felt nonplussed: as far as Alletha Rye went, taking her into custody appeared to have been a mistake.

"You will swear to this testimony of yours, Mr.—Winter?"

"When you please. The slight amount of facts—the sounds—that reached me in regard to what took place in Mr. Ollivera's room, I have related truthfully. Far from Miss Rye's having had aught to do with it, she was not even in the house at the time; I affirm it as before heaven."

"Who was the man?" asked Judge Kene—and Mr. Butterby, as he heard the question, gave a kind of derisive sniff. "Come, tell us that, Mr. Winter."

"I cannot tell you," was George Winter's answer. "Whoever it was, he went down the steps quickly. I was looking over the top balustrades, and caught but a transient glimpse of him."

"But you saw his face beforehand?" —when he looked out of the room?"

"I saw some one's face. Only for a minute. Had I known what was to come of it later, I might have noticed better."

"And this is all you have to tell us?" cried Henry William Ollivera in agitation.

"Indeed it is all. But it is sufficient to exonerate Miss Rye."

"And now, Bede, what do you know?" suddenly spoke Mr. Greatorex. "You have acknowledged to me that you suspected at the time it was not a case of suicide."

Bede Greatorex came forward. All eyes were turned upon him. That he was nerving himself to speak, and far more inwardly agitated than appeared on the surface, the two practiced observers saw. Judge Kene looked at him, critically and curiously; there was something in the case altogether, and in Bede himself, that puzzled him.

"It is not much that I have to tell," began Bede, in answer to his father, as he put his hand heavily on the table, it might be for a support to rest on. "A circumstance caused me to suspect that it was not a case of suicide. In fact, that it was somewhat as Mr. Brown has described it to be—murder. That someone else caused the death."

A pause of perfect silence. It seemed to Bede that the very coals cracking in the grate, sounded like thunder.

"What was the circumstance?" said Mr. Greatorex, for no one else liked to interrupt. "Why did you not speak of it at the time?"

"I could not speak of it then: I cannot speak of it fully now. It was of a nature so—so—so—" Bede came to a full stop; was he getting too agitated to speak, or could he not find a word? "What I would say is," he continued, in a firm, low tone, rallying his nerves, "that it was sufficient to show me the facts must have been very much as Mr. Brown now states them."

"Then you only think that, Bede?"

"It is more than thinking. By all my hopes of heaven, I declare that Alletha Rye had not, and could not have had, any hand in the death of John's death," he added, with emotion. "Father, you may believe me: I do know so much."

"But why can you not disclose what it is you know?"

"Because the time has not come for it. William, you are looking at me with reproachful eyes; if I could tell you aught to clear the charge—so much as I know of it—has lain on me with a leaden-weight: I would have been only too glad to disburden myself of it at first, had it been possible."

"And what rendered it impossible?" questioned the clergyman.

"I thought my opportunity for slipping away, and had crept down nearly to the drawing-room door, when it suddenly opened, very quietly, and a face looked out. Whoever it might be, I suppose the sight of me scared them, for they retreated, and the door was reclosed softly. Then one also sending me back upstairs; and I remained up until the same person, as I supposed, came again, descended the stairs, and left the house. Greatorex, whose health since the past few days had steadily failed, avowed himself at last unequal to work, and an extra amount of it fell upon his clerks. Roland thought it his and a shame that before Christmas Day had well turned he should have, as he phrased it, "to stick to it like any dray-horse." A rumor had arisen in the office that Bede Greatorex was going away with his wife for change and restoration, and that Mr. Brown was to be head of the department in Bede's place. Roland did not regard the prospect with pleasure. The grievance that lay uppermost on his mind this evening, was the silence of Sir Vincent. For Hamish he had grieved until it had seemed that he could grieve no longer; the rumored change in the office might never be carried out; but on the score of Sir Vincent's neglect there was no palliation.

Loungning quite back in the old elbow horsehair chair, his feet stretched out on the hob on either side of the fire, sat Mr. Roland Yorke. He had just come home to his five o'clock tea, and took the occasion to indulge in sundry reminiscences while waiting for it to be brought to him. Christmas had passed, these two or three days now, the brief holiday was over, and working days were going on again.

Roland's mood was a subdued one. All things seemed to be, more or less, tinted with gloom. Hamish Channing was dying; a summons had been sent for his friends; the last GRAND YORKE St. 1622 hour could not be very far off, and Roland felt it deeply. The ill, worked by his brother Gerald, seemed never to go out of his mind for a moment, sleeping or waking. Vexation of a different kind was also his. Day after day in his sanguine temperament Roland had looked for a letter from Sir Vincent Yorke, appointing him to the post of, bailiff; and no such letter came. Roland, who had heard nothing of the slight accident caused by Gerald (you may be very sure Gerald would not be the one to speak of it), supposed the baronet was in Paris with Miss Trehern, or under a touch of discomfort lay in the office. Bede Greatorex, whose health since the past few days had steadily failed, avowed himself at last unequal to work, and an extra amount of it fell upon his clerks. Roland thought it his and a shame that before Christmas Day had well turned he should have, as he phrased it, "to stick to it like any dray-horse." A rumor had arisen in the office that Bede Greatorex was going away with his wife for change and restoration, and that Mr. Brown was to be head of the department in Bede's place. Roland did not regard the prospect with pleasure. The grievance that lay uppermost on his mind this evening, was the silence of Sir Vincent. For Hamish he had grieved until it had seemed that he could grieve no longer; the rumored change in the office might never be carried out; but on the score of Sir Vincent's neglect there was no palliation.

INFECTIOUS ABORTION

A Much Too Common Trouble With Cattle To-day.

Care Needed in Purchasing Cows—Isolate and Treat Infected Animals —The Horse With Fever—Potato Disease Investigation.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

After an exhaustive study of the causes and treatment of infectious abortion of cattle, Dr. C. D. McGilvray, Principal Ont. Vet. College, Guelph, has come to the following conclusions:

1. In purchasing breeding cattle, make careful enquiries to ascertain if the herd from which they are being obtained is free from abortion disease.

2. If doubt exists as to their freedom from this disease, have all newly obtained pregnant females tested or keep them under observation until they calve.

3. Cows should be placed in maternity stalls to calve.

4. Whenever a cow aborts keep her isolated until she cleans.

5. Thoroughly clean and disinfect the stalls in the stable. The bedding and litter removed from the stalls should be burned, together with the aborted fetus and the afterbirth.

6. Wash the hind parts of all the exposed pregnant cows with an antiseptic solution.

7. Cleanse the genital passage of the aborting animal in all cases of retained afterbirth. Irrigate the womb with a mild warm antiseptic solution or a similar solution. Make use of uterine antiseptic capsules.

8. Do not allow cows with retained afterbirth to remain in stalls adjacent to other pregnant females.

9. Keep aborting cows segregated from the others so long as they are discharging. Wash their hind parts before allowing them to return to the herd.

10. Allow a period of one month to elapse before returning aborting cows to the bull. Wash the bull's sheath after service of aborting cows.

11. Do not allow the bull to serve cows which have a discharge from the vulva. Serve all cows on neutral ground.

12. In affected herds obtain the advice of a qualified veterinarian as to the use of vaccines combined with sanitary measures.

13. In badly affected herds best results are obtained from the use of a live culture vaccine administered to the non-pregnant females two months before breeding.

14. In the case of valuable cows becoming barren, the services of a skilled veterinarian should be obtained for the purpose of treating the womb and ovaries.

15. If calves become affected with white scours, immediately separate the sick ones from the healthy. Consult a veterinarian regarding the use of calf scours serum in conjunction with sanitary measures.

16. Nutritious deficiencies should be corrected as far as possible by supplying mineral elements in the feed.

THE HORSE WITH FEVER.

Drenching May Cause Foundering or Death — Medicine and General Treatment Recommended.

Many good horses die every winter, killed by well meaning people who do not know. On many farms if an animal shows any symptoms of ill-health the first thing done is to give a physic drench or ball. If it is a cow, sheep or pig, an unnecessary physic is not likely to do any harm, but with the horse it is different.

Purge a horse when there is fever present and you will in an given case probably kill him. If you do not succeed in killing him, he will likely be greatly handicapped for the rest of his life by founder. Never purge a horse that has a fever. Use mild laxative only.

Fevers come on suddenly. Severe cases show coldness of the extremities, surface of the body, nose and ears, shivering, breathing increases in frequency. Time to call a Qualified Veterinary if there is one to be had. If not, the following treatment is suggested: Blanket the horse well and put him in a warm, comfortable stable, and give two ounces of the following every fifteen minutes, or until the horse begins to sweat: Aconite, one grain; spirits of nitre, four ounces; water to make a pint. With sweating started give the following fever mixture at the rate of two ounces every two hours:

|---|---|
| Fluid Extract Aconite | 1 drachm |
| " Belladonna | 1 drachm |
| " Gentian | 1 ounce |
| Potassium Nitrate | 2½ ounces |
| Water to make 1 pint. | |

Keep a bucket of clean water in which a small quantity of potassium nitrate has been dissolved in front of the horse at all times. Feed soft feeds, as boiled oats and bran. Do not move the horse out of the stable until the temperature has been normal for at least 48 hours.—L. Stevenson, Dept. of Extension, O.A. College, Guelph.

Potato Disease Investigation.

Investigational work carried on by the Department of Botany of the Ontario Agricultural College during the past six years has brought out the following facts:

That selected, certified seed potatoes give much better results than the uncertified seed potatoes when have been commonly used by the farmers of this province in the past.

That Northern Ontario seed potatoes give as good yields on the average as those imported from the Maritime provinces.

That in certain sections of old Ontario excellent seed potatoes can be produced by continued selection and roguing.

165,000 Medals Awaiting Claimants.

Over 165,000 medals and memorials of the Great War are going begging, as the result of the absence of claimants. The Dominion Government incurred a considerable expenditure in having these made, so that those who fought for the Dominion would have some enduring memento of the heroic services rendered, but because the addresses of the intended recipients are not available they cannot be despatched. In a large number of cases they have been sent out, but have returned in the mails as the result of incorrect addresses.

Altogether, 2,857 of the 1914-15 stars, 94,896 British war medals, and 57,428 victory medals are available for issue, and 3,256 memorial plaques, and 4,733 memorial scrolls, issuable to the next of kin, nearest relative of deceased soldiers, are also ready to be mailed, together with 348 memorial crosses issuable to mothers and widows of those who paid the supreme sacrifice.

Grenfell of Labrador.

That indefatigably energetic and practical missionary Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell sends us a charming set of stories relating to the people of Labrador, the land of his adoption, in "Northern Neighbors." All the joy, gloom, tragedy and comedy of that rather terrible coast appears in these artless little bits of veritable history, for they are that, though none the less interesting on that account. There are not many who are able to imitate the good and clever doctor in his self-sacrificing and useful work. The world would be all the better for it if there were. But there are hundreds of lives, young and old, who would be bettered and might be inspired to higher things by a careful reading and pondering over these tales. Every school and Sunday School library should contain this book, and it would be well for the country if it could be placed in every Canadian home.

EXTRAORDINARY MAN

NIKOLAI LENIN REGARDED BY RUSSIANS AS A GOD.

Son of a School Teacher Had Honor of Being the Subject of More Discussion Than Any Man Produced In Europe In More Than a Century.

Nikolai Lenin is generally conceded to have been one of the most extraordinary men ever produced in Russia. Even those who are most affronted by his Communist doctrines do not grudge him admiration for tremendous force of character and devotion to an ideal. One writer said recently that he shared with Napoleon the honor of being the subject of more discussion than any man produced in Europe in more than a century, outstripping even the kaiser in this respect. In Russia he is regarded as a god. None of the other leaders ever approached him in the matter of whole-hearted reverence yielded by the general public; and millions in other lands will regard him as a world figure. Undoubtedly there was something superhuman or inhuman about Lenin.

There is a legend that Lenin came of a noble family, but it is only legend. His father was a school teacher at Simbirsk, Russia, where Nikolai was born April 23, 1870. Later the father became a state councillor with the title of Excellency which explains the legend of nobility. Lenin was a particularly bright boy at school, and when he graduated, his master wrote of him that "his progress in school, his ability, industry and strength of character give the greatest hopes of future progress in science. He is extremely gifted, zealous and accurate." Oddly enough the master who wrote these words was F. M. Kerensky, the fate of whose son it was to rise to be for a while ruler of Russia, and then to be overthrown by Lenin. The lad might have proceeded to distinguish himself in science as his master had predicted had not the massacre of several hundred miners by czarist officers turned his mind to politics and revolution. He began to write pamphlets denouncing the Government, which were secretly circulated. He signed his articles, "Nikolai Lenin" and, afterwards adopted the name as his own, though his real name was Vladimir Ilyitsch Ulianoff. He was further embittered by the execution of one of his brothers who was accused of having been implicated in a plot against the life of Czar Alexander III.

Lenin went on to the University of Petrograd and soon was deep in the confidence of the young revolutionists of the period, and it was while at Petrograd that he definitely gave himself over to revolution as a career. For his part in organizing a labor union he was sent to Siberia. He was eventually freed on condition that he leave Russia. He travelled in Europe writing and lecturing for Socialist and revolutionary publications and societies, and thus his fame gradually grew. He persistently advocated red revolution as the only cure for Russian evils, and when the first revolution was planned in 1905 he returned to Petrograd. His presence soon became known and he had to flee to Finland, where he tried to help direct the revolution that proved so ghastly a failure, though a Bloody Sunday of that period is now more honored in Russia than any other day of the year. When the World War broke out he was in Austria from which he was swiftly banished when it was learned that he was trying to change the international war into a class war, in which the workers of all countries would attack the employers and capitalists.

As the struggle proceeded he did what he could to have his incendiary doctrines preached among the Russian soldiery, and on this account particularly became well known to the German Intelligence Department. In 1917 when the czar was overthrown, but when it appeared that under Kerinsky the Russians might continue to fight, Lenin appeared in or, as was charged, having been given a clear passage by Germany, or, as wash charged, having been heavily subsidized by Germany to do what he could to break down Russian morale. He turned up before the All-Soviet Congress and boldly urged the workers to do away with Kerensky and seize the power for themselves. His appeal failed, but shortly afterwards he attempted a coup d'etat which was suppressed by the Petrograd Soviet and Kerensky. Again Lenin had to flee for his life. He hid in a strawstack and peasants brought him food, while soldiers and bloodhounds searched for him. Finally he obtained a passport as a Finn, disguised himself and escaped on a train in company with a friendly engineer.

Trotzky, in the meantime, was the ruling spirit of the Petrograd Soviet and he was a disciple of Lenin's. He paved the way for his return when it was seen that the tottering provisional Government was about to collapse. At the last moment Kerensky fled, many of his associates were arrested and the power fell into the hands of the Soviets. Lenin became Premier at the age of forty-seven. His first task was to get Russia out of the war. The treaty of Brest-Litovsk was signed, though it was a disgraceful and degrading one forced upon a beaten enemy. The collapse of Germany not long afterward, however, made it impossible for its conditions to be enforced, and Lenin was free to put through his internal program. That program was the greatest experiment in Communism ever attempted. It included the abolishment of money and religion; the massacre of hundreds of thousands who did not approve of Communism, and economic isolation from the rest of the world. Lenin had calculated that, seeing how brilliant a success he was making, the workers in other countries would rise against the capitalistic governments. This they failed to do, and it was their aloofness that helped break down Lenin's original plans.

Old Love Festival.

In Scotland and elsewhere at one time St. Valentine's Day used to be one of the red-letter days of the year —the great love festival, when many quaint customs and strange superstitions were faithfully observed. A hundred years ago, however, it was among young folk a very considerable vogue, possessing, in fact, a significance for youthful hearts what was supposed to have a very direct bearing on their future matrimonial destiny.

Why Valentine's day to choose
A mistress, and our freedom loose.

MOTHER SAVES DAUGHTER'S HEALTH

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Both Mother and Daughter

Lumsden, Saskatchewan.—"My mother had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and when I needed something for my periods I took it and got good results. I recommend it to women with any female trouble and I know other women who have been helped by it and do the same."—Mrs. Max Retzer, Lumsden, Saskatchewan.

Many cases like this come to our notice. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is often recommended by the mother and the grandmother too, for bear in mind, it has been helping women for nearly fifty years.

Women Tell Each Other

In your own neighborhood are women who know the value of this wonderful medicine and they talk to one another about it. So if you are troubled with pains and irregularities, a tired feeling, nervous and sleepless spells, or have other annoying symptoms caused by some female trouble, you have only to ask some neighbor what she thinks of your taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

World's Greatest Dam

Within 200 miles of the great seaport of Bombay, India, and less than 50 miles from Poona, the summer seat of Government and the headquarters of the Southern Command, at a place called Bhatgar, there is approaching completion an irrigation work even vaster than the Assuan Dam, not only in magnitude but in the effects that it is designed to produce.

Picture, if you can, a dam over 5,000 feet in length; nearly 200 feet high. The stones used in its construction, placed end to end, would stretch half way round the globe.

Picture a lake eighteen miles long and 46 miles in circumference, with a water spread of fifteen square miles and a depth of 143 feet, formed by this dam. Picture two canals both of them twice as long as the Panama, one of them commanding an area of 300,000 acres and the other an area of 600,000 acres.

Then you will get some idea of the gigantic scheme of irrigation within a couple of hundred miles of the city of Bombay. It is the biggest irrigation scheme in the world—bigger even than the Assuan Dam, which every tourist in Egypt sees. Yet if you asked ninety-nine out of a hundred apparently well informed people in India if they had ever heard of the Lloyd Dam at Bhatgar they would have to admit that they had not.

Lying to the east of the Ghats, a great range of hills that runs hundreds of miles down the western shores of India, is the great plain of the Deccan, the home of the Marathas, whose people, it has been said, expect a famine once in three years and one in every half of the cultivators in this tract cannot count on more than one good year in every five. To them irrigation is a necessity of life. Several big works are already in operation, but the Bhatgar works will surpass them all and when completed will form the greatest irrigation scheme in the world.

The Lloyd Dam, called after Sir George Lloyd, the governor of the Presidency, who has taken the keenest interest in the progress and promotion of irrigation works in the presidency, will accord protection to an immense area.

The cost of the whole scheme is approximately three and a quarter million pounds and it is expected to give a return of about three per cent. on the capital outlay.

While not one person in a hundred thousand has ever heard of the Lloyd Dam, Assuan is sufficiently well known, for the names of its contractors, Aird and Willcocks, to be familiar to the British public, and honors and rewards have fallen to them. But the Lloyd Dam has been planned, designed and carried out by the men of the Public Works Department—and anonymity is usually the accompaniment of Government Service.

The greatest irrigation work in the world has been carried on quietly, unobtrusively, as part of the day's work. The designers and builders of this great engineering triumph, which will take away the fear of famine from thousands of villages, which will contribute enormously to the contentment and prosperity of a great part of the presidency, and do incalculable good to the tillers of the soil, has been built by members of the Bombay Public Works Department, one of those great services which it is the delight of certain sections of the Indian Press to refer to as "battening on the poor cultivator" and "sucking the life blood of India."

How many times have we heard India vaguely described as the engineer's paradise? Yet how few people know anything at all of the gigantic schemes which have been carried out and are still being carried out in a land which has often to be coaxed into fertility! Never by any chance are they told anything about them by the politician.

The British engineer in India is not a "booster." He gives the best of his life to the country, and then he goes home, often to obscurity. The marvellous engineering feats that he has accomplished ought to be the pride of an Empire. But the Empire seldom knows anything at all about them. Even the people whom they benefit know nothing of them or if they do take them as a matter of course.

Chippendale Furniture.

Chippendale furniture dates from Thomas Chippendale, a famous tradesman who published "The Gentleman's and Cabinetmaker's Directory" in 1754. He lived in the reigns of William of Orange and Queen Anne, and initiated successfully not only Dutch and French styles but Chinese furniture also. He was one of the first to use what was then called "Spanish" mahogany because it came from the Spanish Main, the West Indies, Central America, and the northern South America. Very little Chippendale exists today, and what does exist is exceedingly valuable; hence imitations of it are numerous.

The annual election of the officers of the Mission Circle of Grace Church, was held on Monday night last and resulted as follows: President, Miss Emma Vanaltine; 1st Vice, Miss Myrtle Russell; 2nd Vice, Miss Lotta Vanalstine; Sec., Miss Grace Hall; Cor. Sec., Miss Isabel Card; Treas., Miss Edna Hull; Pianist, Miss Helen Hull; Supt. Systematic Giving, Mrs. Gerald Smith.

Mr. Fred Henderson, Belleville road, had the misfortune to lose three cows last week, one Monday morning, one Wednesday morning and one on Friday morning. All died from eating musty sweet clover hay. The Animals Health Department, Ottawa, was notified and an officer was sent and with Dr. E. Ming held a post mortem, revealing conditions which would point to poisoning, confirming Dr. Ming's opinion when he first saw the animals. Farmers should be very careful and not feed musty sweet clover.

Johnny Williams, erstwhile pitcher for the Grand Trunk ball team of Belleville, and during the spring training and part of the campaign with Rochester, of the International League, as a professional, has been sold outright to the Binghampton Club of the Tri-State League. This report emenates from the secretary's office, of the Rochester ball club. He was loaned to the Pittsfield club some time ago, but they having no use for him, returned him to Stallings, who has finally disposed of Williams. The road is sure rocky in professional company.

Toronto, May 10.—Referendum days are near, if gossip in the Conservative camp is to be believed, says The Globe. That the issue on the liquor question upon which the people are to cast their ballots is to be one of Government control is generally accepted on all sides. Those who should be well informed say that the questions will include a proposed measure of local option. It is said that a vote is to be taken some time prior to Dominion Day and that June 23rd, the second Monday preceding the holiday, is the likely date. No confirmation could be secured from official quarters.
